ANTI MONEY LAUNDERING (AML) POLICY

Money Laundering is the process of which proceeds of crime or terrorism are changed to give the appearance that such funds come from legitimate sources.

Money laundering activities may come in many forms, from a simple single act to sophisticated and complex multiple schemes. Such money passing from person to person or through company to company being handled by multiple methods through multiple property to disguise its source.

The legal definition of Money laundering (as under Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Prevention Act of Estonia) is the:

the conversion or transfer of property derived from criminal activity or property obtained instead of such property for the purpose of concealing or disguising the illicit origin of the property or of assisting any person who is involved in the commission of such an activity to evade the legal consequences of that person's actions;

the acquisition, possession or use of property derived from criminal activity or property obtained instead of such property, knowing, at the time of receipt, that such property was derived from criminal activity or from an act of participation therein;

the concealment of the true nature, origin, location, manner of disposal, relocation or right of ownership of property acquired as a result of a criminal activity or property acquired instead of such property or the concealment of other rights related to such property.

Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Prevention Act and other applicable acts of Estonia place legal obligations on all companies in respect of any suspected acts of money laundering.

Whilst some Companies may not be covered by the requirements of the Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Prevention Act, guidance from finance and legal professions indicate that voluntary compliance and the putting in place appropriate and proportional anti-money laundering safeguards and reporting arrangements would be welcomed.

This is a limited part of the full Company AML policy, which may be provided upon request, if required.
